OPA Forecasts 'Long Breather' From Rationing

CHICAGO, June 5. (U.P.)—Warner P. Struss, director of the OPA food rationing division, said today the nation would enjoy its current "breathing spell" in food rationing as war indefinite period, and that "no man knows" just how long it will last.

In a prepared speech at the 40th annual convention of the National Association of Retail Grocers, Struss said the rationing now was "in the midst of the most quiet and least painful period" in its history since rationing began.

"Just how long this breathing spell will last no man knows," he declared. "The best rationed are the least rationed, and we long for conditions we want it we shall continue on the same or an even more relaxed basis. When and if the supply situation changes, rather than face the brunt and the unfairness in all of those families, we will be ready to meet the situation as it arises."

"It is my earnest hope that this will be continued."

Struss made the following other statements:

1. The decision to remove food from rationing May 3 resulted from big buy runs, corn shortages and an imminent food shortage, approach of warm weather when butter declines and the need for more milk.
2. Laws were not plentiful as rationing was one-way, and rationing was being relaxed in some regions, and rather than set up a regional rationing position, it was removed from the rationing list.
3. Less desirable beef cuts were removed from rationing as they were not needed as much.
4. Canned corn was removed from rationing because the supply of the 1943 crop was ample, wholesome and plentiful.
5. Canned applesauce was removed from rationing as it was surplus to the war effort.

1944 goods came to the fore. It is still necessary to ration sugar. The total amount allocated to OPA by the War Relocation Authority for 1944 will permit less than 1943 quantities.

WASHINGTON, June 5. (U.P.)—American diplomatic and economic officials here today are studying the possibility of applying to Argentine firms the policy of continuing blacklisting sanctions in force for a prolonged period after the war ends.

It was announced a month ago as a "pretext of business" that the U.S. had decided to continue to apply to Argentine firms which were under pressure to decrease their aid to the enemy.

At that time the principle was held down that in general the sanctions would be lifted from Latin American firms as quickly as possible after the war but would be continued in force against European firms, penalizing those during the critical period of reconstruction.

Now, however, it has virtually been decided to make an exception to the Latin American policy in the case of Argentina on the ground that the government and the people of that country have participated in seeking means to aid the enemy during the course of the United Nations.

The post-war blacklist policy is reported authoritatively to have made a deep impression in most European capitals. It has stimulated only one serious study since announcement, that was Prime Minister Churchill's "blacklist order" for Spain two weeks ago.

One point of view is a recognition of the whole picture: blacklisting of Argentina, which officials agreed that the policy still should not be applied to the country as it would be seriously endorsed.

At present it is being most actively applied in the cases of Sweden and Finland. The first group of Finnish firms, a total of 14, were sent on the list announced yesterday. They included companies of low importance in Finland's political and economic life.
